Steve Simon Campaign response to the final repeal of conversion therapy ban

Steve Simon, candidate for Waterloo City Council At-Large, has been running a campaign focused on putting families first and keeping national divisive politics out of our city government. Today, the city council passed for the final time an ordinance to repeal the city's conversion therapy ban, which passed earlier this year.

During the meeting, members of the council and the mayor confirmed that the city was facing a potential lawsuit due to the conversion therapy ban.

“The original ordinance should not have passed in the first place. We should not be getting between children, parents, and their health professionals. Divisive national politics have no place in our city government. Thankfully, the city council used good reasoning to avoid a crippling lawsuit, knowing that there are state laws to protect abused children.” – Steve Simon, Candidate Waterloo City Council At-Large

Simon will continue to run a campaign focused on unifying families and commonsense issues pertinent to city business including fiscal responsibility and supporting our first responders.

“Instead of causing more division in the community, we should be focused on things that unify us like keeping our neighborhoods safe, our streets clean, and spending tax money wisely”
